BY THE DEVONSHIRE

THE DEVONSHIRE HISTORY

PUB WITH A 'NOTORIOUS' PAST.

The Devonshire, previously known as the Duke of Devonshire is more than 200 years old and is a listed grade 2 building. This handsome stone-built pub would not look out of place adjacent to the village green in a Peak District village but it is where it is, on the busy A6 through Belper. Originally a centre for the nail-making industry since Medieval times, Belper expanded during the early Industrial Revolution to become one of the first mill towns with the establishment of several textile mills; as such, it forms part of the Derwent Valley Mills World Heritage Site.

In the early 1980s, the pub gained national notoriety when it introduced topless barmaids for a time.

It's now a period travel inn steeped in history and has been brought up to date with quirkiness and peculiarity by former anti-pasti punk band lead singer Martin Roper, who also runs the Exeter Arms and the Old Silk Mill pubs in Derby.

Bridge Street, Belper, circa 1940.
The Devonshire is part way down
the street on the right.
